The Australian labour movement began in the early 19th century and since the late 19th century has included industrial and political wings. Trade unions in Australia may be organised on the basis of craft unionism, general unionism, or industrial unionism. Almost all unions in Australia are affiliated with the Australian Council of Trade Unions, many of which have undergone a significant process of amalgamations, especially in the late 1980s and early 1990s. The leadership and membership of unio

TRADE UNIONISM IN AUSTRALIA

Between 1850 and 1869 about 400 unions were formed in Australia. These early unions represented craft-based workers such as stonemasons and carpenters, as well as informal combinations of craftsmen and other workers such as shop assistants, labourers and miners. Many of these trade unions were formed to assist members during illness, death and unemployment.

In the late 1960s Australian unionism was on the flood tide: growing in strength, industrially confident and capable of shaping the overall political climate of the nation. Forty years on, union membership and power is ebbing away despite community support for trade unionism and the continuing need for strong unions. Even the unprecedented mobilisation against WorkChoices, which defeated a government and lost the prime minister his own seat, has done little to turn the tide. With compelling rigour, Tom Bramble explores the changing fortunes of what was once an entrenched institution. Trade Unionism in Australia charts the impact on unions of waves of economic restructuring, a succession of hostile governments and a wholesale shift in employer attitudes, as well as the failure of the unions' own efforts to boost membership and consolidate power. Indeed, Bramble demonstrates how the tactics employed by unions since the early 1980s may have paradoxically contributed to their decline.

This book explains the decline in trade union participation, looking at both macro and micro levels.
